

The next day we as usually started with breakfast in the breakfastroom.

The breakfast

This guy makes the puppet to climb the box

This is the entrance to a restaurant. Stylish!

Here we are arriving at the whiskymaker Jameson

This is the first we see when we enter. In the background we see The Chimney Viewing Tower.

The entrance to the exhibition

Pictures of the founders

The first cash register

Storage of the finished product

Transport of the finished product

Fast delivery

Various products

Various taps

Bottles with fitted taps

Here we see that it is possible to test whiskey

We can buy tests in the bar

Kjell is queing

Things are going to happen

Kjell is paying

Kjell in deep concentration

Anne Berit is also concentrating

Afterwards we had beer at the restaurant outside

Outside is also the oak barrel, which was used to mature the first distillation product in 1780

Anne Berit had to test sit it

Here we are moving on

In a distance we see here The Chimney Viewing Tower, which was used by Jameson in the distillation process. Now, one has to pay to get up at the viewing platforms and look out over Dublin.

We passed the river Liffey once more

Approaching the Guinness brewery

Transport in the old way. This guy doesn't say hallo. He wants payment because we take pictures of his horse.

Horse cabs are ready for business

Inside the exhibition. This is the document, which gives Arthur Guinness right to rent for 9000 years for £45 a year!!! It is fitted into the floor.

Kjell is admiring all the beer types

One of the trade marks

A bin of barley, which is used in the process

Arthur Guinness' signature

Kjell is studying the grain mill

Storage tanks

Diagram of the production process

Storage tank

The storage tanks seen from above

Guinness had his own water supply from the mountains

This is hopper, which gives the beer a bitter taste

Ready for tasting

Mmmmm...

Then a bit advertising

Beer barrels made of oak

The barrels are marked like this

Some of the production process

Then the steel strip shall on

Like this .. Puhh

Locomotiv for internal transport

Guinness also had his own boats

Objects used in connection with the transport

Arthur Guinness used among other things a harp in his trademarks, similar that in the Irish coat of arms.

Here we have reached the top, The Gravity Bar.

Beer tapping

Mmmm....

Close-up

Here we got a seat

We had a nice view

The Wellington monument in Phoenix Park. It is 62 m high and is thereby the biggest obelisk in Europe.

View in direction of the centre of the town

Here we look further in direction of the Irish Sea

We took a taxi back to the hotel. Here we are driving past the only remains of the wall that the vikings built and once went all around Dublin.

St. Audoen's Church was built 1181 – 1212 and is the oldest parish church in Dublin.

We are also driving past another part of Dublin Castle.

Back at the hotel. We just had to have a picture of the lists around the window before we left.

Outside the hotel where we stayed.

The airplane, which we are returning home with
