

The 27th of February we visited Bjørn and Bente. Their dog Aki greets us.

I and Bjørn in the sofa.

There was scheduled a dinner meal and I and Anne Berit are ready.

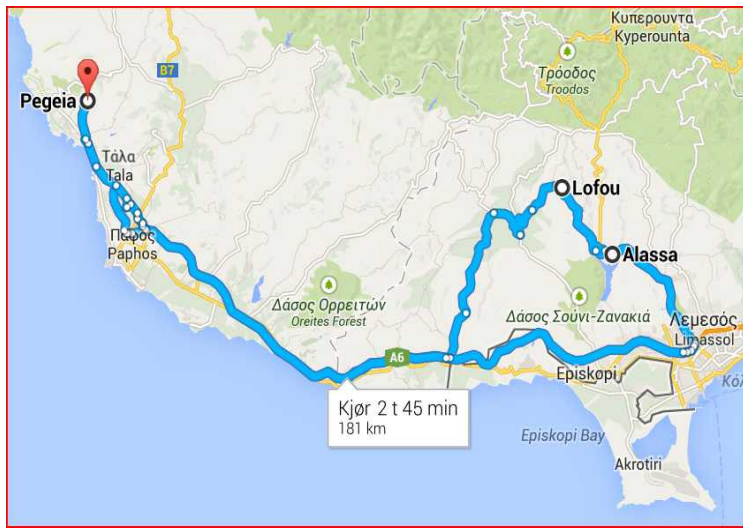

This is chicken cooked in foil.

I'm allowed to take a picture.

After dinner Aki would sit on my lap.

The 4th of March we drove for a trip north of Limassol.

Here we arrive in Lofou.

Much stone and narrow streets. We did not see people when we drove through town. According to Wikipedia there are only 10 people who are resident here, so it is perhaps not surprising that we did not see any.
 In 1862, however, there were 200 inhabitants here.

The church.

A restaurant.

The street below the restaurant.

The street above the restaurant.

Here we are looking across the roofs.

In the valley below, there are many terraces on the hillsides.

Terraces along the entire valley sides. It looks like natural terraces.

Down in the valley we can see the Kourris dam. It was completed in 1988 but was not completely filled with water until 2004. When we were there it seemed to be missing a lot of being full, so it requires a lot of rain to fill it up again.

Here we are a bit closer.

Further down, the road goes over a small stream that probably flows into the pond.

Here is the stream on the way down.

This is almost down to the dam.
In the middle of the picture there is a ruin church.
The village Alassa was here earlier, but when the dam was built, the village had to be moved.

A chapel is a little higher up.

This is how Alassa looks now, after it is moved.
Alassa's history.

A couple of pictures from Alassa.

Here we drive past an imposing building in almost no man's land.

The 18th of February we went for a walk along the coast again. At that time there were many flowers. More flower pictures follows.

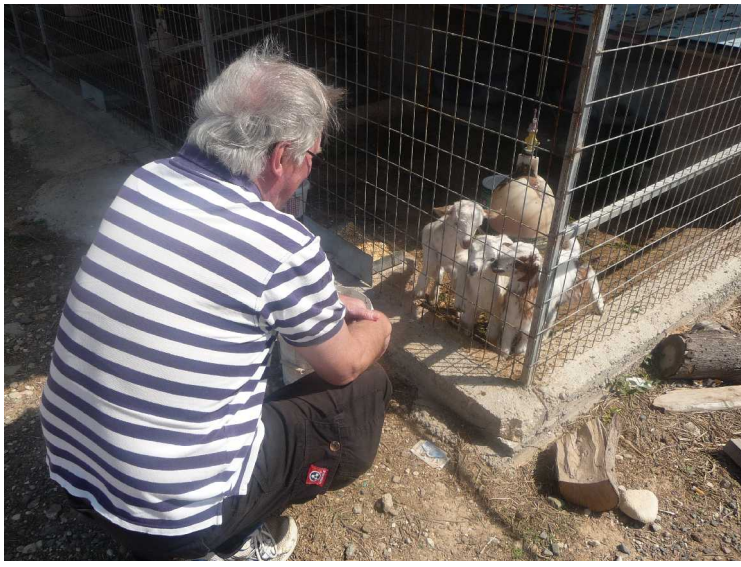

In this slope there was quite a flowering.

A place they had animals in enclosures. Here are a few goat kids. They had not plenty of space, but they had both food and water.

The goat kids were very curious.

I'm talking with them. Bæææ!!

Here are the goats.

There were also ducks, chickens and these birds, which we believe are guinea fowls.

Here we are back where we parked the car.
We see here Corallia Beach.

The next day, the 19th of March, we walk on the seafront in Kato Paphos.
Closest to the town center there are many restaurants along the sea.

The boardwalk goes further south, until Paphos Airport.

Here we look north towards the center of Kato Paphos.

More flowers.

The cat is hunting something.

The hunt is over.

Here we look north towards the center of Kato Paphos.

A view of the harbor of Kato Paphos.

There are some trees that lose their leaves during the winter.

Rock Taverna Restaurant on the corner seems to be bricked in local stone. It is located right in the center of Kato Paphos.

The next day, the 20th of March, we continue south.
Here are the hotels close to each other.

We went so far as to this little church.

Then we went back the same way to where we had parked the car.
