

Saturday the 4th of July 2009

This day we moved further on to Pescara. Here we were going to stay at a hotel by the beach, and it was the plan to go to the beach a couple of times.

Pescara's coat of arms

Pescara is the regional capital in the region of Abruzzo, the main city in the province of Pescara and has about 120 000 inhabitants.

When we went off the train in Pescara we went in the wrong direction and ended far from the hotel. When we finally realized that we had a beer and phoned for a taxi.

Here we are waiting for the taxi to come

We were going to stay at Hotel Regent

The reception

The room

In the afternoon it clouded over and it became so cold that it was not tempting to go to the beach.

In the evening we went out for dinner. We found a restaurant just beyond the hotel, but Kjell thought it didn't look inviting enough, so we went on to find a better. We walked for 2 hours through half the city. We ended back in the same restaurant. The restaurant was very good and now there were a lot of people. We ordered "Mixed fish". It turned out to be all kinds of seafood, except fish!!!

The next day there were still cold and it was raining. There was no beach life this day either. We were mostly sitting on the balcony solving puzzles and Sudpku. There was a plastic mat imitating grass covering the whole floor of the balcony. It was full water and a pigeon much, but we survived.

We had lunch at the same same restaurant as the day before.

Here we have a lot of dishes on the table

Here we are talking with those who run the restaurant

The last day we went to a café and had ice and coffee and sambucca afterwards. It was still cold and grey and there was no beach visit this day either.

The day we left we took a couple of pictures to show the view from the balcony. That day was nice and sunny!!!!

