

RHODOS 26. AUGUST – 2. SEPTEMBER 2012

After we had been at Lindos, the sightseeing bus stopped by some springs before we came to Afandou. There are seven springs here and they are called Epta Piges.

Here we are on our way from the bus up against the 7 springs. There was a path through the dense undergrowth.

Old tree root.

The trail was quite wide in some places.

There were pheasants in the woods.

Close up of a pheasant.

From one of the springs, there is a tunnel down to a small artificial lake.

This is the Apollo guide and a local guide who was with us.

This is the opening of the tunnel. It is possible to walk through the tunnel. It is 150m long and there is no light. You also have to wade in the creek that runs through.

They're getting ready to go through the tunnel.

These are heading into the tunnel.

These were some pictures from the area.

We sat at this restaurant.

Signs on a tree.

A platan tree with spiked fruits.

A map of the area.

After we had been at the 7 springs, we walked off the bus outside Afandou, and went into the city center.

We had a bite to eat at a restaurant in the city. When we were paying the bill we got a Ouzo “on the house”

A few pictures of Kjell at the restaurant.

Photo taken of the restaurant from the street.

Here we are with the waiter.
He knew Peter from Edinburgh, who Kjell met here in Afandou many years ago.

The main street in the town center and the tourist train.

On the other side of the street there is a whole range of restaurants.

Peter worked at this restaurant for a while.

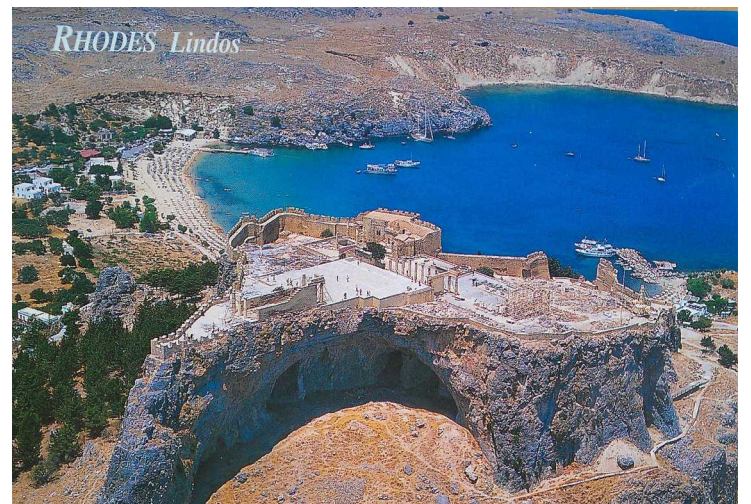

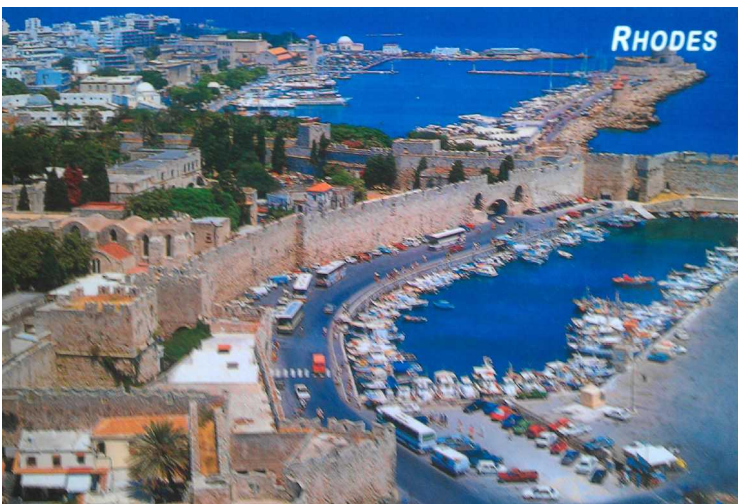

Inside the city of Rhodes again. The last night we ate at the restaurant Napoleon to the right.

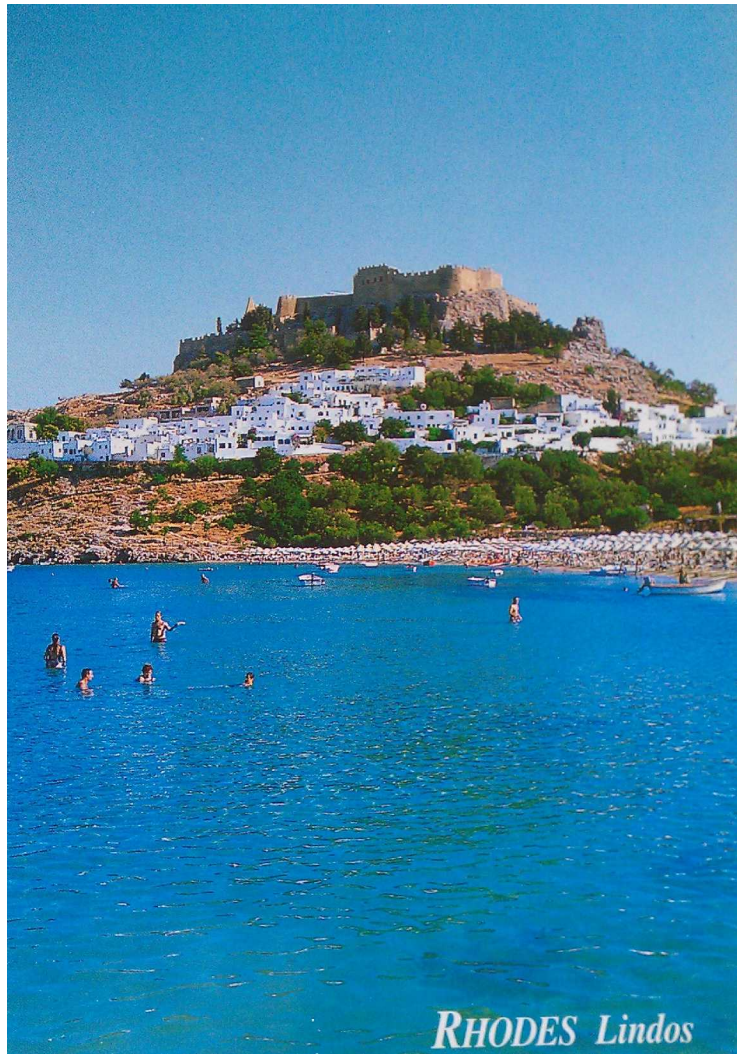

Pictures of the new town pedestrian street.

Finally we bought some postcards.
