

SKASDAMMEN AND GRESBERGET THE 13TH OF SEPTEMBER 2020

This time we drove another trip to Finnskogen.

There is a lot of yellow and red colors in the forest at this time of the year.

The blueberry heather is completely red.

Here there are crowberries.

More autumn colors.

A few hundred meters from the main road we came to the south end of Skasen. It is the second largest lake on the Norwegian side of Finnskogen. Only Røgden is larger.

There are some cabins at Skasen.

Skasen is also regulated, but there is no active regulation, so the water level is fairly constant.

This is the dam. It was closed.
In addition, there is an overflow under the road where the water is drained through a large plastic pipe.

This is below the dam.

Søndre Skasdammen was built in the end of the 1800's. Here, only the old main house still stands. There are traces of several other buildings in the surrounding area.

On the other side of the road, a little further north, is Nordre Skasdammen. It is also from the 19th century. Only the old main house is left here. There are plans for restoration.

These houses are located in the same area. They looked like they were in use.

Further north there was a large and fine pine forest.

Here we turned.

Here we have driven on towards Græsberget. This horse was very curious and came over to us when we stopped the car.

A clearing pile in eastern Græsberget. It has been lying here for a long time, so it is quite mossy.

There are two hamlets in Græsberget, east and west. The settlement started here around 1720. It looked as there was some agricultural activity in Vestre Græsberget, while in Østre Græsberget it has been a while since there has been any activity. The fields seemed to be taken over by bushes.

This barn building in Østre Græsberget will soon collapse.

A large house in Østre Græsberget. It is a house from the early 19th century, but it was changed in the 20th century and there was panels mounted on the outside.

A granary in Vestre Græsberget.

A field in Vestre Græsberget.

House in Vestre Græsberget. It was built in 1912 and replaced the old one. The outbuildings are gone.
