

TYSKEBERGET ON AUGUST 2. 2025

It should be an open day at Tyskeberget Finnetorp in Åsnes Finnskog that day, so we decided to go there. We drove a detour to Namnå to bring Ingrid, the aunt of Anne Berit.

Finnskogen has its name after the immigrants who traveled from Finland, mainly from Savolax, to Sweden from the 1570s to the 1600s. From the 1640s there is available written information on Finnish settlements at Finnskogen in Norway.

It is the same genus that has lived on Tyskeberget from 1760 to 2011. The last user, Odd Tyskeberget, gave Torpet free to Åsnes Finnskog Historielag in 1996. They run Torpet as a museum today.

We drove this stretch.

The main building.

The barn were set up in 1907.

Here is a shop with different goods.

Washing powder

Cloths

Distilled tar

Ladles

Clothings

Berry picker

We paid here.

Old tools have been exhibited on the barn. There are various pictures, but the exhibition was quite messy.

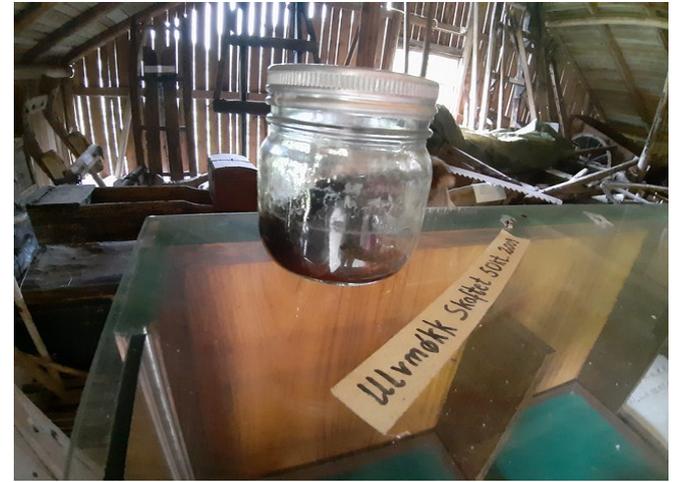

Old plows

Bear shit

Wolf shit

Snowplough

Then we went up to the main house.

The entrance

These were at the entrance.

A stuffed animal in the hallway

Many pictures in the living room.

There are people at the tables

I have also set down

Ingrid buys waffles and coffee for us.

Good waffles and coffee.

This is the old farmhouse.

The old farmhouse was the main house until 1914 when the current farmhouse was built. The house has been larger, but part of it was cut off and transported down to Svullmyrkoia, further down the Tyskeberget. The house has also been used as a brewery and as a baking house.

There were also several other houses on the Torpet, but we did not take pictures. There are storehouse, forge, woodshed, grain store, summer barn and outhouse.

Demonstration of weaving.

Various goods
